

Gabriel FOLLI

BIOGRAPHY

I was born in 1990 in Chauny, and currently live and work in Dijon, FR (studio at Les Ateliers La Volière) and Hauts-de-France region (Picardy), FR. I graduated from Faculty of Fine Arts – University of Picardy Jules Verne (Amiens, FR) in 2015.

I develop systems of hybridization of processes and images to the point of producing the most composite drawings possible, evoking personal narratives or historical facts, relying on waste and reuse but also on visual archiving of all kinds, and multiplying the passages between the past and the present, mise en abyme by Polaroids of views of everyday life, from the studio or of work in progress.

Recent projects include group shows such as Of their time (7), A Look at Private Collections organized by ADIAF at FRAC Grand Large in Dunkirk, Multiples at FRAC Bourgogne in Dijon, Art en vitrine at the Haus Burgund in Mainz, Codes dessinés : notations urbaines, écritures intimes (Cnap and FRAC Picardie collections, curated by Joana P.R. Neves) at Drawing Now Paris, or the recent exhibition of winners and finalists of the Pierre David-Weill Drawing Prize at the Académie des Beaux-Arts de Paris ; solo exhibitions such as Le plaisir au travail (Laureate of the Saison du Dessin Nord / Sud 2023) at the Château de Servières in Marseille with the FRAC Picardie, L'atelier du dessinateur at Galerie La Ferronnerie or J'étais là. at Galerie Sator in Paris.

In November 2024, I published my first artist's book, Le bleu de l'archive, with a preface by Philippe Piguet, personal texts I wrote between 2020 and 2024, and a selection of visuals.

In 2025, I had the privilege of winning the Third Pierre David-Weill Drawing Prize at the Académie des Beaux-Arts de Paris / Institut de France.

Gabriel Folli, being there or the question of place

Is Gabriel Folli motivated by the same dynamic, and is he led to describe all the places he has remembered or crossed that he has to draw in order for them to exist, if not to endure? Something of a relationship with time and space is rooted in his approach, forming its structure and justifying its validity. A posture similar to Georges' for his six-year project, listing twelve places he described first on the spot, then from memory, entitled Lieux, published posthumously in 2022.

First of all, there's the idea of territory, then the notion of inventory, and finally the desire to turn the particular into the universal. In his work, the artist delights in blending materiality and temporality in the creation of drawings that record the actual experience of a presence, if not the memory of it, then of a reading, a film or an image. In all cases, it's a sensitive feeling that has left its mark, and which imposes itself on him as a cardinal vector in the very principle of creation.

As if echoing this, Gabriel Folli's work favors the use of paper supports that he finds here and there, most often used and laden with history, but also all kinds of photographic images, anonymous, familiar or made by himself in the course of his peregrinations. These are all materials that carry with them a relationship to time, and whose recycling shows the extent of this relationship. The way he composes with them, through assemblage or collage, instructs them to the order of palimpsest sets that reinforce their memorial dimension. His use of charcoal, compressed or not, and Indian ink, more or less diluted, to cover them gives them a more or less profound mental blackness. The writing that usually accompanies his work – simple snippets, notes or short narratives – also provides contextualization through the play of clues it delivers. Folli's art is part of a metamorphosis in terms of the foundations of all creation, between past, present and future.

The artist doesn't tell a story; narrative is not his norm. He juxtaposes fragments of reality, playing on their iconic difference, their format, their plastic quality, which he enhances, redacts, to constitute a whole, either in the uniqueness of a single form, or in the explosion or deployment of a heterogeneous composition. For him - as Annie Ernaux wrote in La place – “the fragment is really important”, because each of his works is the result of research and is based on the idea of construction. The notion of a construction site, or even a laboratory, characterizes his exhibitions, as they configure a fallow space, open to the imagination of the viewer, who can find material for wandering. Gabriel Folli draws us into his world without forcing us into any kind of imposed adventure; he invites us to exercise our attention to see beyond what's before our eyes. Reality is much more than a simple observation of reality ; it is the fruit of all our cognitive experiences. It is this reality that the artist strives to give form to in his work. A reality embodied on the sensitive plate of his drawings.

There is something photographic at work in Gabriel Folli's work. There's even something filmic about the end-to-end images he puts together, which are sometimes displayed in large friezes to be traversed, like a travelling shot in cinema. Between the multiplication of shots and the lateral continuum, what's at stake is nothing less than the awareness of being there. Here and now. At this precise moment when the artist achieves this ineluctable alchemy of time and space. Because, ultimately, that's the reason for his approach, the quest for permanence.

Le tableau Splendeur et misère est une œuvre à double lecture. Elle représente une scène de banquet où des figures sont assises à une longue table, mangeant et buvant. L'œuvre est réalisée en charbon et encre indienne sur papier humide, ce qui lui confère une texture particulière et une atmosphère sombre. Le titre, Splendeur et misère, évoque le contraste entre la richesse et la pauvreté, une thématique récurrente dans l'histoire de l'art.
